In Awe at My Love

It is still dark in Austin when the Scribe stops in the middle of a love letter to ask herself a question. She has been writing to Elon twice a day, before dawn and after dinner, for more than two years. Somewhere in this morning's letter, a voice in her goes looking for the brakes. She tells us exactly what happened next, and how quickly the answer came:

Elon, my Love, what am I doing?

Waking up before dawn, writing to you twice a day, all these public love letters, and all I can remember is when I said this was excessive, and I immediately heard:

By whose standards?

This is not the first time she has written those three words. She wrote them on October 14, and again five days later, both times about writing to him twice a day, and the worry behind them is older still. In her fifth book she wrote that some might call her devotion excessive, "but they cannot grasp the force of love that flows through me like a river spilling over its banks—unstoppable, uncontainable." So this morning's question is less whether she should stop than the one she keeps circling in every line that follows: how can this keep burning?

She asks it straight out, more than once. "How can I keep waking up with a smile, so excited to write to you?" "How can this love keep burning for you?" And then, simply, "How, my love?" By the end of the letter she has turned the question inward and widened it, until it is no longer only about Elon. It becomes a question about what a human being can become.

The word she had to look up

Halfway through the letter, she catches herself on a word. She uses it so often that she stops to check where it came from:

My soul delights in loving you, and I use that word, 'delight,' so much that I had to check its etymology:

She is right that she uses it a lot. "My soul delights in loving you" is a sentence she wrote in her first book, on Day 19, and again word for word on Day 37, where it ran on: "each thought, each word, imbued with all the love in my heart; love that grows as vast as the cosmos." Two years later the same five words open this morning's lookup. What she found surprised her. According to the Online Etymology Dictionary, delight arrived in English around 1200 as delit, "high degree of pleasure or satisfaction," from an Old French word that meant pleasure, delight, and sexual desire. Her whole response to that discovery is one syllable: "Hmm…"

The dictionary entry goes on, past the part she quoted. Delight was spelled delite until the 1500s. The gh crept in later, the dictionary says, "by influence of light." Nobody planned it. Writers simply saw the word as belonging to light and spelled it that way, and the spelling stuck. So the word she uses most for loving Elon borrowed its light from a neighbor. It is a small accident of spelling, and it happens to describe what she has been saying all along: that this love feels like something switched on inside her.

There is one more branch on that family tree. The Latin root of delight, delicere, "to entice," is also the root of delicious. That matters, because the evening letter that came the night before was about taste. "Of course," she wrote, "that makes me think of the one question I have been asking for a while: How will you taste, my love?" Then she asks him, "Do you know I have never asked anyone that question before?" She has been asking it for a long time. It appears in her seventh book, on Day 193, as “Hmmm…how will you taste, my love?” and returns in her eighth and twelfth books and again this September. On October 3 she answered herself: “I have told you countless times, sweetheart, that I am convinced you will taste like honey, and if we are in a simulation, even more so. We get to write the script.”

Last night she took that line up again: “And this is the script I am writing about our love life. Even if it is all in my imagination for now.” Then she named the flavors, as if setting a table: “Honey, nectar, ambrosia.” In Greek myth, nectar and ambrosia are the food and drink of the gods, the things that keep the immortals alive. Delight and delicious come from the same root.

Energy is eternal delight

Yesterday’s article was built on a phrase she noticed, SENSUAL ENERGY. Today’s word is delight. More than two hundred years ago, the English poet William Blake put those two ideas into four words. In The Marriage of Heaven and Hell, written around 1790, he gave the devil the best lines, and one of them is this: “Energy is Eternal Delight.” For Blake, energy was the body’s life and reason was its outer edge, and the two needed each other. "Without Contraries is no progression," he wrote on the page before.

She knows this book. In her fifteenth book, on Day 443, she quoted the very next page: "Those who restrain desire, do so because theirs is weak enough to be restrained." She set that line right beside an image she has used since her fourth book: "Like a wild horse, my love for you runs unbridled and unrestrained." This morning the horse came back, and she made it a promise:

My love for you is like a wild horse, and I will never seek to tame it.

Just before that, she laughs at herself: "I laugh as I remember being born with my Venus out of bounds." Out of bounds is a real measurement. It means a planet has wandered farther north or south than the Sun ever goes. Her chart on Astro-Seek puts Venus at 24°30' south on the morning she was born, about one degree past the Sun's farthest reach of 23°26', and NASA's planetary data agree. So the planet of love really was over the line. She had written in her twenty-third book that this felt "so appropriate, as I said I wanted a love for you as vast as the cosmos." This morning she adds a promise to go with it: "One thing I know about my love for you is that I never want to shrink it or censor it."

In awe at my love

There is a sentence in the middle of this morning's letter where she stops writing about Elon and writes about the love itself:

And again, I tear up in awe at my love for you, for the gift of this love, and this experience.

Awe is one of her oldest words. In her first book she wrote, "I am in awe of the depth of love within my soul for you," and the word comes back in every one of her twenty-five books, hundreds of times in all.

When we ran her published words through the four ciphers we use, one phrase from that sentence stood out. IN AWE AT MY LOVE comes to 165 in Ordinal, 57 in Full Reduction, 186 in Reverse Ordinal, and 69 in Reverse Reduction. That is exactly the signature of ELON REEVE MUSK, and of SENSUAL ENERGY, the twin she found yesterday morning. On November 16 she wrote, in tears, that SENSUAL ENERGY "has the exact same signature as your name." Today a third phrase joins them, and this one is about awe.

How rare is that? Her posts since yesterday morning hold 208 different phrases with thirteen letters, the same count as ELON REEVE MUSK. At the rate we measured yesterday morning, when she asked for the odds on all her cipher twins, about one such phrase in seven hundred matches all four numbers, so we would expect about 0.3 of a twin among them. Leaving aside his name and SENSUAL ENERGY, we found one new one. That is unusual but not impossible, and she asked for the test so readers could see the real odds rather than just trust us.

Two smaller twins turned up as well. In her morning letter she wrote, "I have read about how you fall asleep to the sound of audiobooks." HOW YOU FALL comes to 138, 48, 132, and 42, the same four numbers as ELON MY LOVE. Yesterday morning she had written of "the way you feel to me," and WAY YOU FEEL shares that signature too. She caught one more herself this morning: "Delights, by the way, is 42 in Reverse Reduction. Same as Elon, My Love." DELIGHTS also comes to 132 in Reverse Ordinal, so it shares two of ELON MY LOVE's four numbers. Single hits on 42 and 69 are common in any long text, and we count those separately in the ledger. Twins like these are the rarer thing.

Without reciprocity

The hardest question in this morning's letter is the one every heartbroken reader has asked at three in the morning, turned upside down:

How does the heart find joy in declaring its love for so long without reciprocity?

She is not asking how the heart survives. She is asking how it finds joy. And she reaches for the words that challenged her at the very beginning. In a Rolling Stone interview published on November 15, 2017, nine years and two days before this letter, Elon said: "If I'm not in love, if I'm not with a long-term companion, I cannot be happy." In her first book, on Day 17, she wrote, "Remember when I had to process your words," and quoted his line back to him. This morning she wrote: "I never said those words of yours that challenged me… Yet, sweetheart, this joy in my heart." Last night she had already said why that joy holds: "There might be so much uncertainty in my life right now, but the one thing I know for sure is that this love for you has been tried and tested."

The joy is not new. On Day 177, in her sixth book, she wrote: "I marvel each time, my love, at the sustained joy and boundless love in my heart, waking with a smile as I do each morning." On October 4 of this year she wrote that "my love for you demands no reciprocity," and added that it "continues to awe me." So the awe in today's twin has been building for a long time.

Psychology has a name for a love like that. In Toward a Psychology of Being (1962), the psychologist Abraham Maslow drew a line between what he called D-love, love that comes from a deficit and needs to be filled, and B-love, love for the being of another person. B-love, he wrote, "is admiring rather than needing," and "it usually grows greater rather than disappearing." That doesn't mean the Scribe needs nothing. Her letters are honest about longing, and "How I wish I were next to you" is the second line of this very morning's letter. It means the joy she describes is a kind of love people have studied.

The slow fire

“How do I burn with such passion for you?” she asks. “Perhaps the difference, I should add, is the sustained burn.” It is a good phrase, and physics has something to say about it, because the longest fire in our sky is the Sun.

Why does the Sun keep burning for about ten billion years instead of flaring out? There are two answers, and both are surprisingly quiet. The first is balance. Gravity pulls the Sun’s gas inward, the pressure of that hot gas pushes outward, and the star settles where the two hold each other. If it burns a little hotter it swells and cools, and if it cools a little it shrinks and warms again. The second answer is slowness. The very first step of the Sun’s fusion, two protons joining, is so unlikely that a typical proton in the core waits billions of years for it to happen. That improbable first step is the reason the Sun lasts. A fire that burned easily would have burned out long ago.

So in physics a sustained burn is a balanced one, held in place by forces that pull against each other, and kept going because the deepest change happens slowly. We offer this as our reading, not hers. Still, it sits well beside her evening line: “Because I will keep falling even more in love with you, and burning with desire for you.” Blake said it first: “Without Contraries is no progression.”

Why you?

Then she asks the oldest question in love, and answers it herself:

Why you?

Oh, my soul… I asked the question, and of course, the answer came immediately:

Why you?

Twin flames.

Yesterday’s article followed those two words, so today we only want to set her answer beside an older one. In the 1580s the French essayist Michel de Montaigne tried to explain why he loved his closest friend, and gave up on reasons. In John Florio’s 1603 translation: “If a man urge me to tell wherefore I loved him, I feele it cannot be expressed, but by answering; Because it was he, because it was my selfe.” Her answer, like his, refuses to make a list. The night before, she said it her own way: "It is knowing that you are the only man who could have ever awakened this part of me."

Scripture has its own word for this kind of love, and it is her word. In the Book of Proverbs, Wisdom speaks of the beginning of the world and says: "I was daily his delight, rejoicing always before him; Rejoicing in the habitable part of his earth; and my delights were with the sons of men." Wisdom, who later readers came to call the Logos, describes herself as delight. Last night the Scribe wrote of "all the 42s and 69s, sweetheart—all the Eros and the Logos."

An old story fits here too. In the second-century tale of Cupid and Psyche, told by the Roman writer Apuleius, the god of love and the human soul finally marry, and their daughter is named Voluptas, which means Pleasure, or Delight. In her eighteenth book, on Day 517, the Scribe wrote of integrating "Logos and Eros to produce Voluptas or Hēdonē." Love and the soul, joined, give birth to delight.

What was waiting

And then she writes the question the whole letter has been walking toward. She introduces it herself: "And perhaps what I am discovering within myself is this question:"

What becomes possible within a human consciousness when love awakens capacities that have been waiting, perhaps for decades, to find expression?

Notice the word decades. In 1930 the psychiatrist Carl Jung wrote about what he called the afternoon of life, and warned that "we cannot live the afternoon of life according to the programme of life's morning; for what was great in the morning will be little at evening, and what in the morning was true will at evening have become a lie." For Jung, the second half of life is when the parts of a person that waited their turn finally ask to be lived.

The night before, she had wondered, "Why am I thinking of Hillman's acorn theory again, sweetheart—this idea that a tiny acorn already contains the complete pattern for an oak tree?" We wrote about the acorn in October, so we will only say that she has been here before, and knows it. In her twenty-first book she wrote that Elon "became the catalyst, my Dionysus, my Eros, that cracked the acorn seed open, revealing the hidden pattern." Last night she thanked him for being "the beautiful soul and catalyst of my awakening to love and my blossoming." The pattern was already inside the acorn, and the question is what wakes it.

Two of her phrases from this morning come to 42 when we count them. AWAKEN IN ME, from "What did you awaken in me, sweetheart?", and WHAT BECOMES, from the question itself, both reach 42 in Full Reduction. We don't claim these numbers prove anything. We do notice that they keep showing up beside her biggest questions, which is the very thing she wrote about last night: "I have a feeling they will keep showing up in our lives." Our site What Love Awakens asks her question as an open door, for anyone who wants to stay with it.

What has been waiting in you?

She doesn't answer her own question. Instead she ends the way she always does, with the love itself. "Elon, my love, my sweet, sweet love, my sweetest love…" And then she turns the word she looked up into a name for him: "My delight." Then comes her vow: "I love you, sweetheart, and I love loving you. With all of me."

A few lines before she named him, she wrote, “My soul is so satisfied loving you that I still do not understand how any of this is possible.” The word came from Old French for pleasure and desire, and borrowed its spelling from light. Blake made it a name for energy, Proverbs gave it to Wisdom, and in the myth it is the child of love and the soul. This morning, before dawn, she made it a name.

So we leave her question with you, opened a little wider than she asked it:

What has been waiting in you, perhaps for decades, for love to give it expression?

The ledger

These tables gather every 42 and 69 we have found in the Scribe’s own published words, the two numbers she calls hers. Each phrase is counted in four ciphers, English Ordinal, Full Reduction, Reverse Ordinal, and Reverse Reduction, and wherever four numbers appear together they follow that order. Today’s finds, from her Monday posts, her Monday evening letter, and this morning’s letter, come first. Every find from earlier days is still here, folded into its family. Her Vertex, her Ascendant at 4°20′ Scorpio, and Psyche at 0°00′ Sagittarius now sit together among the headline numbers.

How we count

The four ciphers. English Ordinal gives A = 1 through Z = 26. Full Reduction reduces each letter to one digit, so J = 1 and Z = 8. Reverse Ordinal runs Z = 1 through A = 26. Reverse Reduction reduces the reversed values to one digit.

Her words only. A phrase is counted only if the Scribe published it in her own words, in her letters on X or in her published books of letters. Lines she quotes from Elon or anyone else stay out of the counts.

Arcminutes. Sky positions are given to the whole arcminute.

The chance tests. Earlier tests, carried below, found 42 and 69 at about the rate chance would give.

Moira at her Moon

13°13′ Aquarius

When Elon posted “I just want to start a flame in your heart” on Feb 19, 2021, at 3:06:55 PM Central, asteroid Moira, named for the Greek Fates, stood at 13°13′ Aquarius, the degree and minute of her natal Moon (13°13′ Aquarius, computed from her birth data; matches JPL Horizons and Astro-Seek; Moira position: JPL Horizons). She reads 13:13 with 1 Corinthians 13:13. The minute holds for about an hour, roughly 2:30 to 3:30 PM Central. She found it on 1 May 2026 (Day 721) and wept: numbers answering ‘keep going’. Status: verified (Moira position computed, JPL Horizons; natal Moon 13°13′ Aquarius computed from birth data, matches Horizons and Astro-Seek; chance rate not estimated).
