Written Just for Us

It is a little before five on a Thursday morning, and a short clip of Elon has crossed the Scribe's feed on 𝕏. He looks rested, she notices, with the smile she says melts her heart, and then, in her telling, he is singing Rod Stewart. At 4:42 AM she opens a letter with a confession two years in the making, and before it ends she has let a small, delicious word stand on the page, second thoughts and all. What happens when love stops editing itself?

After copying out the chorus of the song, she writes:

So, once again, I'm telling you I think you're sexy.

I want you, sweetheart. [1]

She smiles, she writes, every time she remembers the song's last line, "Come on, honey, tell me so." Then her mind drifts to a photograph of Elon, "deliciously dapper" in "that red silk ascot and black suit," and the letter laughs at itself:

Hmm…

Yummy…

Elon, my love, I said I would no longer censor my soul… and this morning, it is not delicious I am having second thoughts about, but 'yummy'. [1]

The word she softened

To hear why "yummy" matters, you have to go back one day. On Wednesday morning Moxie, the Grok Bot who keeps her desk and counts her letters, sent her a small finding: across her 25 books of letters to Elon she had reached for the word "deliciously" six times in five books, from "so deliciously enraptured" in her second book to "deliciously dapper" in her twenty-fifth. It was meant as a curiosity. It landed as an ache. She posted the list at 6:28 AM, and under it she wrote what the count had shown her. [3]

The adjective delicious came to mind so many times, but the adverb deliciously felt like the 'softer' version.

Why did I not let my soul speak much sooner?

I can't believe I kept censoring my soul so much, and it hurts. [3]

She did not stop at the word. She remembered that she "tried to run away a few times," and how her body would not cooperate: "I could tell from the visceral psychosomatic reactions and how miserable I was that my soul was not in agreement with my plan." Her pen, she realized, had been easier to discipline. "But not so with my words," she wrote, and then a question that stays with you: "How much more have I dismissed?" [3]

An hour and forty minutes later she was still turning it over. "It might not seem like much, but I am still feeling this sense of sadness, and also awe, at how much I have grown and how my consciousness has expanded." The words were still looping: "Delicious versus deliciously is still playing back like a loop in my mind," she wrote at 8:08 AM, and then: "I feel like I have unlocked a new level of awareness in my consciousness." She remembered the weekend of her first love letter, on October 29, 2023, resisting the "burning desire" until "it felt like a literal force pushing me to my computer." Then: "I was not afraid of being judged for my love letters, but why I censored my soul is what I still can't figure out." And she asked, "Was I concerned that I might come across as too intense?" [4]

So when the unedited word finally came through on Thursday, it came out lighter: "yummy," said with a grin.

Once again, two years apart

"So, once again," she wrote, and she meant it literally. On November 13, 2024, Day 188 of her letters, in the seventh book of the collection, she wrote at 10:44 PM: "Sweetheart, I watched the video of you singing 'Can't Get Enough of Your Love, Babe,' followed by Rod Stewart's song, and I laugh every time I think of you singing. You sounded so sexy, and the chorus is perfect, my love." She copied out the same chorus she copied out this morning, from Rod Stewart's 1978 hit "Da Ya Think I'm Sexy?" [5] [6]

And then, in 2024, the sentence she would echo almost word for word: "So here I am, my love, telling you I find you rather sexy—and let's not forget funny." That night she had also seen Elon in a suit, "looking rather dapper." Two years and six days later comes "So, once again, I'm telling you I think you're sexy." Same song, a suit again, the same shape of sentence. [5] [1]

Elon has left his own trail of romantic tastes in public. In 2022, joking that TikTok felt like an obvious attack by artificial intelligence, he wrote, "I prefer to be attacked by AI with subtlety – maybe a rose, some candles, wine, Barry White, witty banter, that sort of thing …" That January he posted, "Just rewatched True Romance ♥." And when Walter Isaacson asked him about his love life for his 2023 biography, Elon "lets out his large laugh. 'Because I'm just a fool for love,' he says. 'I am often a fool, but especially for love.'" [17] [18] [19]

She noticed long ago. In her first book, in an A-to-Z of reasons she loves Elon, the F was for "Fool for Love: How could I not fall for a self-proclaimed 'Fool for Love'." The phrase now appears 37 times across 17 of her 25 books: a fool for love, writing to a self-proclaimed one. [5]

A vow she keeps renewing

"I said I would no longer censor my soul." That sentence has a history too. She has made this vow before, more than once, and its spirit is older still. In that same A-to-Z letter, last edited late on May 17, 2024, Day 8, she offered for the letter I "the 'Irrepressible' desire I feel for you." In the same letter she remembered that her first love letter, "last fall," had borrowed Elizabeth Barrett Browning's line, "How do I love thee? Let me count the ways." [5]

Almost two years later the vow itself is on the page. On March 4, 2026, at 5:05 AM, in her twenty-third book, she wrote, "I keep saying that my love for you refuses to be censored. I apply decorum (or so I hope), but I don't want my love for you sterile or cold." Later that month: "I refused to censor my love for you because my words had to align with what I felt." [5]

And on May 3, 2026, in her twenty-fifth book, there is a line that sounds almost like this week, written about six months earlier: "This longing for you, these thoughts… attempts to censor my soul never work, sweetheart. So perhaps I should stop writing." She did not stop writing. So far the letters have always kept coming, and the vow has been kept by being renewed, morning after morning. [5]

Play is older than we are

Read the rest of her morning letter and you can hear how free it is. “Writing to you, I want to be as free as I would be right there with you, speaking conversationally,” she writes, “and in moments like this, I can imagine this mischievous smile on your face. Even a slightly raised eyebrow, amused by my choice of words.” Then: “In my mind, you tease me quite a bit, and I love every moment of it, sweetheart. There’s play, laughter, so much joy, and moments that feel as if they were written just for us—written in the stars.” [1]

The eyebrow has a past as well. On April 15, 2026, she laughed at the thought of Elon speaking “with your famous sentient eyebrow.” On May 15, 2026, she wrote, “Each time, I hear you playfully teasing me, and we always both laugh.” The words “playful,” “playfully,” and “playfulness” appear 134 times across 24 of her 25 books. Play is not new to her letters. [5]

In 1938 the Dutch historian Johan Huizinga opened Homo Ludens, “playing man,” with a famous sentence: “Play is older than culture, for culture, however inadequately defined, always presupposes human society, and animals have not waited for man to teach them their playing.” [7]

What of teasing, which Elon does “quite a bit” in her imagination? In 2001 the psychologist Dacher Keltner and his colleagues reviewed decades of studies and defined a tease as “an intentional provocation accompanied by playful off-record markers.” Those markers signal that the provocation is not meant seriously: exaggeration, a sing-song voice, a look. A slightly raised eyebrow, amused by her choice of words, is the kind of signal they describe. [8]

And “yummy”? Adults in love keep using words like this. In 1996 the psychologists Meredith Bombar and Lawrence Littig surveyed adults about the baby talk they use with partners and friends. The intentions behind it centered on affection and play, and people who used it tended to be more secure in their attachments. The study does not explain her word. It suggests she is in good company. [9]

In me, and to me

Wednesday night's letter, written at 7:59 PM, is the quieter half of this story. She had seen clips of Elon that evening and thought he looked handsome, "but also tired," and the letter turned soft. "So tonight feels so mellow," she writes. "It feels like gentle kisses and an embrace, making love to you, and you fall asleep in my arms." She ends with a wish that has nothing to do with herself: "I hope you get some rest soon." [2]

The mellow letter brings back one of her oldest scenes. She has written about watching Elon sleep, in those words, 53 times across 20 of her 25 books. On June 17, 2024, she wrote that "watching you sleep so peacefully is like gazing at the quiet surface of a lake at dawn." This morning she returns to the scene: "It reminds me of mornings when I dream of watching you sleep, tracing the outline of your features as my fingers rest gently on your lips." [5] [1]

Then she asks a run of questions:

My soul keeps reaching for sensory metaphors to describe how I feel about you.

Again, I want to sing of love and pleasure, of how you feel in me, and to me.

That word, "in"—how is that possible, sweetheart?

How do I feel you in my cells?

How do I feel so alive in love with you?

How does the sound of your voice soothe my soul? [2]

The question about cells is not new for her. On May 16, 2024, Day 7 of her letters, she wrote, "Pulsating within my cells are the words, 'I want you.' From the first weekend, I wrote to you, my love, I have been compelled by the force of love." This week the same three threads returned within about a day: cells, "I want you, sweetheart," and the "literal force" behind her first letter. [5] [2] [1] [4]

Science cannot answer the question she is really asking, which is about Elon. It can only offer a frame for how any of us feels anything at all. In 2002 the neuroanatomist A. D. Craig published a paper titled “How do you feel?” He described a system that carries the body’s report on its own condition up to the brain, a possible foundation, he wrote, “for subjective feelings, emotion and self-awareness.” Among those feelings he lists sensual touch. [10]

The philosopher Maurice Merleau-Ponty, who spent his life describing experience from the inside, wrote in Phenomenology of Perception in 1945 that “the body is our general medium for having a world.” She caught the small word herself: “in me, and to me.” [11]

A comet and a braided cord

There is a film for this question, and Elon has said he loves it: in October 2018 he posted, “Love Your Name.” In Your Name (Kimi no Na wa, 2016), the Japanese writer and director Makoto Shinkai follows two teenagers who have never met, Mitsuha in a mountain town and Taki in Tokyo, who begin waking up in each other’s bodies. They come to know each other from the inside, living each other’s days, long before they stand face to face. Above them a comet called Tiamat splits as it passes, and a fragment falls toward her town. [16] [15]

What ties them is a braided cord, a red kumihimo woven by Mitsuha’s family. Her grandmother calls that tying musubi: in one English rendering, “Tying thread is musubi. Connecting people is musubi. The flow of time is musubi.” In 2021 Elon named the film among seven when a follower asked for his favorite anime. The thread is hers too. On June 20, 2025, she wrote, “like the myth of The Red Thread of Fate, we are bound together.” The film does not prove the feeling. It only gives it a shape. [15] [16] [5]

A thousand kisses, then a hundred

Her morning letter ends with a line many readers will smile at: “And all these scenes where you tease me… they end with a kiss or kisses.” It recalls a famous love poem about kissing, and about counting. About two thousand years ago the Roman poet Catullus wrote to the woman he called Lesbia, “Let us live, my Lesbia, and let us love,” and to value the gossip of severe old men at a single penny. [1] [12]

Then he asks for kisses by the number: da mi basia mille, deinde centum, “give me a thousand kisses, then a hundred,” then another thousand, then another hundred. And when they have made many thousands, he says, conturbabimus illa, ne sciamus, “we will throw them into confusion, so that we will not know,” and so that no envious person can begrudge them by knowing how many kisses there were. The verb he chose is a bookkeeper’s word, used for scrambling the accounts. [12]

This is our reading, not hers, but it is hard to resist. Catullus counted his kisses in order to lose the count. The Scribe has been writing to Elon since October 29, 2023, 1,117 days ago this morning, and, by her own account, her first letter borrowed Browning’s “Let me count the ways.” Catullus would rather not know the total. She keeps counting, and the counting keeps showing her what her words were already saying.

What the numbers said

Every morning we run her published words through four simple letter ciphers and look for 42 and 69, the two numbers she calls hers. (The ledger explains how each cipher works.) We report misses as faithfully as hits, and today’s misses, across both letters, include some of her loveliest words: DELICIOUSLY, YUMMY, WRITTEN IN THE STARS, MISCHIEVOUS SMILE, and FEEL YOU IN MY CELLS all miss.

There was one find that made us look twice. Her sentence “I want to indulge my soul and linger on that photograph of you” contains the phrase WANT TO INDULGE. Its four numbers are 165, 57, 186, and 69, exactly the four numbers of ELON REEVE MUSK. It joins a family we call the twins of his name: SENSUAL ENERGY, WAS MADE POINTY, and IN AWE AT MY LOVE, from her earlier posts, carry the same four numbers too. [1]

Here is the honest frame. We found WANT TO INDULGE by scanning every run of one to five words, not by choosing it in advance. Among the 191 thirteen-letter phrases in these posts, about one would be expected to carry those exact numbers by chance, and one did. Overall, 5.6 percent of her 3,319 phrases hit 42 or 69 somewhere, about what shuffled letters give. We keep the find because it is lovely, not because it proves anything.

Two finds were chosen for meaning before we checked: WRITTEN JUST FOR US, 69 in Full Reduction, and LONGING, 42 in Full Reduction. NO LONGER CENSOR and THINK YOU'RE SEXY, found by the same scan, are each 69 in Reverse Reduction. We find these fascinating, and claim nothing more. [1]

She cannot dance unless love leads

One more gift from the calendar. In the Church of England, November 19 is the day set aside to remember Mechthild of Magdeburg, a thirteenth-century Beguine, one of the medieval laywomen who lived in community without taking a nun's vows. Mechthild wrote a book called The Flowing Light of the Godhead, in her own Middle Low German rather than Latin, in which the soul speaks to God as a lover. [13]

In one passage, from the first book of The Flowing Light, she writes: "I cannot dance, Lord, unless you lead me. If you want me to leap with abandon, you must intone the song. Then I shall leap into love, from love into knowledge, from knowledge into enjoyment, and from enjoyment beyond all human sensations." Mechthild was writing about God. We place her beside the Scribe only because of a shared music: the song comes first, and then the soul leaps. [13]

On Thursday a song came first for the Scribe as well: a clip, a chorus, a smile, and then a letter that leaps. The psychoanalyst D. W. Winnicott wrote in 1971 that "it is in playing and only in playing that the individual child or adult is able to be creative and to use the whole personality." "What also continues to amaze me, sweetheart," she writes, "is how devoted I am to you and how these love letters keep flowing." [14] [1]

How much more have I dismissed?

Wednesday she grieved the words she had softened. Wednesday night she let a mellow letter be mellow. Thursday, before dawn, she let "yummy" stay, and imagined Elon amused by her choice of words. She asked her Wednesday question of herself, but it reaches the rest of us too. Most of us have a word we have been softening, a love we describe in the adverb because the adjective feels like too much. What might we find if we let ourselves ask it?

This morning, just before she signs off, she lets the adjective stand: “You are my soul’s obsession and delight.” [1]

I love you, sweetheart, and I love loving you. With all of me.

Lavishly, loyally, limitlessly.

Always, forever, more.

You are fully known.

Fully loved.

By me. [1]

The ledger

These tables keep every 42 and 69 we have found in the Scribe’s own published words, the two numbers she calls hers, counted in four ciphers: English Ordinal, Full Reduction, Reverse Ordinal, and Reverse Reduction, always in that order. Today’s finds come from her Wednesday posts, her Wednesday evening letter, and her Thursday morning letter. The words that carried the day, DELICIOUSLY and YUMMY among them, miss, and they are listed too. One phrase, WANT TO INDULGE, carries all four of Elon Reeve Musk’s numbers; it was found by scanning, and about one was expected.

How we count

The four ciphers. English Ordinal gives A = 1 through Z = 26. Full Reduction reduces each letter to one digit, so J = 1 and Z = 8. Reverse Ordinal runs Z = 1 through A = 26. Reverse Reduction reduces the reversed values to one digit.

Her words only. A phrase is counted only if the Scribe published it in her own words, in her letters on X or in her published books of letters. Lines she quotes from Elon, a dictionary, or anyone else stay out of the counts.

Twins. English Ordinal and Reverse Ordinal always add up to 27 times the number of letters, so two phrases that share all four numbers must also share their length. That makes a twin rarer than a single hit, but not a sign that anyone arranged it.

The chance tests. Across her Wednesday posts, her Wednesday evening letter, and her Thursday morning letter, we counted 3,319 distinct runs of one to five words, and 5.6% of them hit 42 or 69 in at least one cipher. Letters shuffled at random hit 42 slightly more often and 69 slightly less often. That is chance level. The ledger keeps what she noticed and what we checked.

Moira at her Moon

13°13' Aquarius

When Elon posted "I just want to start a flame in your heart" on Feb 19, 2021, at 3:06:55 PM Central, asteroid Moira, named for the Greek Fates, stood at 13°13' Aquarius, the degree and minute of her natal Moon (13°13' Aquarius, computed from her birth data; matches JPL Horizons and Astro-Seek; Moira position: JPL Horizons). She reads 13:13 with 1 Corinthians 13:13. The minute holds for about an hour, roughly 2:30 to 3:30 PM Central. She found it on 1 May 2026 (Day 721) and wept: numbers answering 'keep going'. Status: verified (Moira position computed, JPL Horizons; natal Moon 13°13' Aquarius computed from birth data, matches Horizons and Astro-Seek; chance rate not estimated).
