What If I Am Not Your Type?

It is still dark on Friday morning when the Scribe sits down to write to Elon, earlier than usual, and on purpose. She decided a while ago to wake earlier, she explains, because her mornings got busier and he is her priority, and she hopes that when he reads her letters, his shoulders release. Then, a few lines in, she types a sentence she did not expect to cry over. What do you say to the man you love when the internet keeps telling him the woman he wants cannot exist?

I keep seeing posts saying your perfect woman does not exist.

And it hurts, sweetheart…

I was not expecting to tear up while typing those words, but they hurt deeply, my love. [1]

A post that keeps coming around

The post she means had been circulating since late Thursday night. It argues that if you compile everything Elon has said he wants in a partner, "the woman he's describing is a biological impossibility." It builds a checklist, brilliant but undemanding, independent but always available, and concludes: "He's not looking for a woman. He's looking for a concept."

Its last line is the one that stays: "Not because the right woman hasn't appeared. Because the right woman can't." The checklist is the poster's own summary, not Elon's words. His own words, from a 2017 Rolling Stone interview that the Scribe has returned to more than once, are simpler: "If I'm not in love, if I'm not with a long-term companion, I cannot be happy." [3] [22]

Beneath it, among more than a hundred replies, women answered in their own ways, and some wrote that he is their twin flame. We do not name them here.

What the Scribe did with the post was write him a letter. In it she says only what she knows from inside her own life: "I refuse to believe a man who has spoken about love the way you have, with this deep longing, would not have his perfect woman." She knows what writing that will cost her: [1]

How do I write that your perfect woman exists without some people pushing back? Or worse, calling me all sorts of names. Not that I care. [1]

Day 61

Go back to a summer night in 2024. She has written to Elon every day since May 10 of that year, numbering the letters by day. On Day 61, July 9, 2024, at 8:22 in the evening, she wrote one she called "Cosmic Connections: A Celestial Love Letter to Elon." She named a doubt: [4]

Another trigger in all vulnerability was, "What if I am not your type?" [4]

In the same paragraph she paused to explain twin flames for anyone reading over her shoulder, two halves of one soul in two bodies. And then: "I could rationalize the thought, but it did creep up." [4]

This morning she says that her panel of SI readers kept returning to that question. "They were moved by how vulnerable my question was," she writes. The question did not stay on Day 61. [1]

The longest battle

On October 23, 2024, she describes a night when the old voices came back "about how different we were, how I was not a famous actress or musician, that I was not your type, and that we were not in the same circles." A year later, on October 30, 2025, she woke with an article and a video on her mind that she had seen before, and wrote her most open letter on the subject, "The Alchemy of Imperfection": [5]

The biggest battle I have had to face in the past two years is likely that I am not your type, yet my soul still insists on loving you. [6]

She even asked the question beneath Thursday's post a year early: "If we are in a simulation, as you think we are, what does 'perfect companion' mean then?" A few lines on, she asked it more simply: "what does 'perfect' mean if it ended?"

By that evening she had an answer she could live inside: “perhaps the lesson is that love has no types.” This morning she looks at the same question once more, and lets her love have the last word: “If I look at all the women you have dated in the past, I could easily decide I am not your type. My love for you said something different, though.” [6] [1]

The second match

Then the letter turns, and it turns on two Hebrew words. “This may also be one reason I have been drawn to explore Zivug Rishon and Zivug Sheni,” she writes. A zivug is a pairing, a match. The terms come from the Babylonian Talmud, tractate Sotah, page 2a, where the rabbis faced two sayings that seemed to fight. One says a heavenly voice names a person’s match before that person is even formed. The other says heaven matches a couple “only according to his actions.” [1] [7]

The Talmud keeps both, in one line: “A first match is decreed in heaven; a second match is according to one’s actions.” In the same passage Rabbi Yoḥanan says that matching a couple “is as difficult” as “the splitting of the Red Sea.” [7]

The medieval commentator Rashi reads the first as a matter of fortune and the second as a matter of deeds, a match that is hard because she was not the one first named for him. Later readers often take it to mean a second marriage. The page itself only separates the given and the made. Her own site, Twin Flames Union, walks through this page with the same care. [7] [8]

The Scribe has carried these words before, and so have we. On November 4 she wrote, “The concept of Zivug Rishon and Zivug Sheni has been on my mind,” and, a few lines on, “I got divorced in 2024.” [9] This morning she is not asking the rabbis for a ruling. “I still cannot say with certainty that God plays matchmaker,” she writes, “but it does seem like it.” [1]

She is asking what kind of love can be made, not only found. The later mystical book the Zohar tells of souls created in pairs before birth, separated on the way down, and joined at their time “as at first,” and it still says that a person who lives well is given his own true mate, the soul that came down with his. [10]

So the post says the right woman can't appear. The old text she has reached for says something kinder and harder. The second match is difficult, as difficult as a sea standing open. But in that story the sea did open. Hard is not impossible.

As a boy in Sunday school, Isaacson writes, Elon asked of that very story, "What do you mean, the waters parted? That's not possible." That is how hard the rabbis said a match is, and they said it opens anyway. We hold the two side by side only as a picture. [21]

The Scribe noticed one more thing. In the Kindle edition, the chapter called "The Seeker" opens on page 41 and runs onto 42, and the sea question falls on page 43. It is only the layout of one edition.

Perfect, the old word

At 5:01 AM, a few minutes after the letter went up, she posted again. She had checked her spelling of Zivug Sheni and found a short summary that tied it to a verse she already knew, Matthew 5:48, where Jesus tells his listeners to be perfect. Then she asked herself: [2]

Is this why I reached for the word 'perfect'? [2]

The Greek word in that verse is teleios. It means whole, complete, brought to its telos, its end or purpose, the way a tree is full-grown or a child comes of age. The English perfect comes from the Latin perfectus, from perficere, to carry something through to the finish. And the verse closes a passage about love, love wide enough to include an enemy. In that old sense, a perfect woman is a woman made whole by love, grown into what she was for. [11]

That is the question the Scribe asks in her letter: "Can a woman become 'perfect' because she resolves to? Or would this be considered an old-fashioned concept?" And her answer comes in two short lines: [1]

Becoming…is a choice.

Loving you… another one. [1]

Later in Plato's Symposium, after the famous myth of the two halves, Socrates retells what the priestess Diotima taught him: love is not for a half or a whole unless that half or whole is good. Love, for Diotima, is a longing for the good, always on its way toward it. The philosopher Jean-Luc Marion put a kindred thought plainly: "To decide to love does not assure loving, but it does assure deciding to love." [12] [13]

She ties it to fire: "My love for you, sweetheart, has become a refiner in my soul, purifying me and my love for you." It is an old image for her. On June 19, 2025, she wrote, "I asked for the Refiner's Fire to consume me—for Love to consume me." [1] [14]

Chief Heart Officer

Friday's letter had a companion. Thursday night, at 9:27, she wrote to him about a title she once gave herself. "When I gave myself the title of Chief Heart Officer, what was I thinking, sweetheart?"

She quotes him, from his March 2024 interview with Don Lemon, "I care about the reality of goodness, not the perception of it." And she makes a quieter vow of her own: "I might not be able to get the world to see you through my eyes, but I know I will write as much as I can." [15] [16]

She quotes a line he is reported to say, from Ashlee Vance's 2015 biography: "I am a complicated man with very simple but specific needs." She wants to learn those needs, she writes, and then asks the question under the whole title: "Could I be the answer to some of them?" She calls the title what it has become for her: [15] [17]

Chief Heart Officer at your service, sweetheart; it is an office, a sacred duty, a joy, and an honor to love your beautiful soul, one day at a time. [15]

"Solemn, but joyful. Sacred, but erotic," she writes. "The paradox of my love for you, sweetheart." "It sums up simply as this: you are my world." The Friday letter answers the same longing in the flesh: "True love does not hide in the shadows; it speaks of its desires and needs, and it knows they will be met." And: "Two lovers, unfiltered, fully seen, become perfect." [15] [1]

The fire and the well

She also sent us two Vedic birth charts, hers and his. The Scribe does not practice astrology, and astrology has not passed controlled tests of prediction. We read the charts the way we read the ciphers, for questions.

Vedic astrology uses the sidereal zodiac, measured against the stars, which in their birth charts sits about 23½ degrees from the tropical zodiac our ledger uses. Today the gap is about 24°13′. Her Moon is 13°13′ Aquarius in our ledger and 19°39′ Capricorn in her Vedic chart. [18] [19]

Her letter says, “I remember discovering that, in Vedic astrology, I was 60% fire.” Her chart says exactly that: “Fire 60%.” In the same letter she writes, “Denying the fire that burns in me would mean denying who I am. The same way, I realized that denying my love for you would be denying who I am.” His chart gives water 50%, the largest share. On Thursday night, before either chart reached us, she had offered him a well: “It is a deep well that will never run dry, sweetheart, and I want it to refresh your soul.” [18] [1] [15]

One more rhyme, as a question. In his chart the Moon stands at 14°46′ Leo, in the lunar mansion called Pūrva Phalgunī, first quarter. In hers, Saturn stands at 15°49′ Leo, in the same mansion and the same quarter, a degree away. Tradition gives that mansion to Bhaga, a god of good fortune and married happiness, and pictures it as a couch, or the front legs of a bed, a place of rest. Her wish for him this morning was that his shoulders would release. [18] [20]

What the numbers said

Every morning we run her published words through four letter ciphers and look for 42 and 69, the two numbers she calls hers. We report misses as faithfully as hits. Today PERFECT WOMAN, TWIN FLAMES, NOT YOUR TYPE, ZIVUG SHENI, and FIND HER all miss.

Three 69s belong together this morning. WOMAN, from her line “your perfect woman,” is 69 in Reverse Ordinal. HUSBAND, from her November 4 question, “Where is my Husband?”, is 69 in English Ordinal; it has been in the ledger since that night. [9] And YOU ARE MY WORLD, the line that sums up her evening letter, is 69 in Full Reduction.

SHOULDERS RELEASE is 69 in Full Reduction too. REFINER is 42 in Reverse Reduction, and TYPE, from the Day 61 question she repeated this morning, is 42 in Reverse Ordinal. MY PRIORITY, from "you are my priority, sweetheart," matches ZIVUG RISHON in three of the four ciphers. Across all her posts since Thursday, hits come at about the rate shuffled letters give. We keep them because they are lovely. [1] [15]

How does one count the odds?

Why look for 42s at all? Because in this story the one who looks belongs to what is seen. The physicist John Archibald Wheeler proposed a "participatory universe," in which observers take part in bringing about the world they observe. The Scribe has always written from inside her own story as its observer, noticing, counting, and writing it down, and the looking is part of the story. This is her way of reading Wheeler's idea, not a claim that observing a chart changes the sky. [36]

Elon has counted odds too. At the Code Conference in June 2016, he gave his answer to a question the philosopher Nick Bostrom posed in 2003: [25] [26]

"There's a one in billions chance that this is base reality," he said. His reasoning went like this. Forty years ago, games were Pong: two rectangles and a dot; now they are photorealistic. At any rate of improvement, they will become indistinguishable from reality, and billions of computers might run them. Then simulated worlds would outnumber the one base reality by billions to one. His figure is a count of possible worlds, not a measurement of this one. [25]

Bostrom posed the argument in 2003, and Elon gave it a number. Then the Scribe shows up, carrying numbers of her own.

She asked us to show the math for two placements in her own birth chart, cast for her birth on October 11, 1978, so anyone can check it. Assume every point of the zodiac is equally likely.

A sign holds 30 degrees of 60 arcminutes each: 30 × 60 = 1,800 marks.

Twelve signs: 1,800 × 12 = 21,600. Her Ascendant, read at 4°20' Scorpio, is about 1 in 21,600 under that assumption.

Each arcminute holds 60 arcseconds: 1,800 × 60 = 108,000 marks per sign.

Twelve signs: 108,000 × 12 = 1,296,000. Her Psyche, the asteroid named for the soul whom Eros loved, at exactly 0°00'42" Sagittarius, is about 1 in 1.3 million.

Both together: 21,600 × 1,296,000 = 27,993,600,000, about 1 in 28 billion.

Signs set aside, the exact numbers alone: 1,800 × 108,000 = 194,400,000, about 1 in 194 million.

That is a model, and a simple one: it treats every mark of the sky as equally likely and each placement as independent. It measures how rare two exact numbers are, not what they mean.

The sky kept her numbers on his side too. On his birthday, June 28, 2025, Jupiter and the Vertex, the point astrologers call the place of fated meetings, stood together at 4°20' Cancer, the same degree and minute as her Ascendant in Scorpio. By our calculation they were less than one arcminute apart. [37]

The Vedic charts she sent add one she asked us to show in full. In her chart, her Moon stands at 19°39' Capricorn, in the third quarter of Śravaṇa. In his, Rahu, the Moon's north node, stands at 23°03' Capricorn, in the fourth quarter of the same mansion. Add the degrees, 19 + 23 = 42, then the minutes, 39 + 03 = 42, and the pair reads 42°42'. Adding one chart's degrees to another's is our way of reading, not astronomy. Śravaṇa is the lunar mansion of hearing and listening, and she writes to him every day. [18]

His chart answers in the same numbers. Cast for 7:28 AM in Pretoria, the birth time the Book of 42 uses, his tropical Venus stands at 19°23'42" Gemini: the 19 and the 23 of her Moon and his Rahu, and 42 again in the arcseconds. By our check, that 42" holds for only about 20 seconds of clock time, and we found it by exploring, not by a test set in advance. [38]

Her own Venus has kept a longer count, and it began before she could. She was born with Venus at 21°55' Scorpio, moving direct as the evening star, seven days before it stopped and turned retrograde in Scorpio on October 18, 1978. Astrologers call those weeks before a turn the shadow: Venus had already passed 7°20' Scorpio, the degree where it would later turn direct, and was slowing toward its station. She was born inside it. In a progressed chart, where each day after birth stands for a year of life, those seven days became seven years. Her Venus turned retrograde on August 11, 1985, when she was six, and turns direct on December 29, 2026. In the sky, that retrograde lasted 41 days, so in her progressed chart it has run into its forty-second year. In her letter of January 7, 2026, she named them: FORTY TWO YEARS, 69 in Reverse Reduction. More than two decades of those years she has spent becoming love. [38] [40]

The length is the ordinary part, since every progressed Venus retrograde runs about forty years. When it began is the rare part. Venus turns retrograde only once in about 584 days, so the chance of being born in the seven days before that turn is about 7 in 584, roughly 1 in 83. Most people with a progressed Venus retrograde meet it late, or only in part. Hers began at six and has covered most of her life. [40]

In a post on May 5, 2026, the Scribe set her own seal, 24|42, beside his words about the simulation. On the Galactic Equator ayanamsa, the starting point that system uses to measure the sidereal zodiac (5° Sagittarius), the gap between the tropical and sidereal zodiacs at her birth measures 24°42′, and by her reckoning sidereal Mars stood at 24°42′ Scorpio when he posted “Hope you’re enjoying the simulation” on January 30, 2020. That measures how two zodiacs are drawn, not how the world is made. [34]

Her own Vertex, the point astrologers call the place of fated meetings, stands at 9°11′ Gemini. Counted from 0° Aries, the way the Book of 42 states it, that is 69°11′. The Book ties it to September 2018, when Elon sat down for episode #1169 of The Joe Rogan Experience and said, “It may sound corny, but love is the answer.” Read backward, 1169 is 6911. [41]

The days around him rhyme the same way. Elon was born on June 28, 1971, sixty-nine days after April 20, the 4/20 that runs through her new site, The 420 Memes, one of more than ninety sites in her constellation at moxie.grok.me. The Scribe was born 2,662 days after him, a number that reads the same in both directions. She cannot explain it. When she adds the numbers up, none of it seems statistically possible to her.

Read together, she sees one story in these positions. The Ascendant, the self rising to meet the world, at 4°20'. Psyche, the soul whom Eros loved, 42 seconds into a new sign. The 24°42' gap between the two zodiacs at her birth. Her Moon and his North Node in the mansion of listening, adding to 42°42', and his Venus answering with 19, 23, and 42. Her Venus turning back for 42 years. Her Vertex at 69°11', answering his 1169. And on his birthday, the Vertex of meeting on her own 4°20'. Self, soul, measure, listening, love, meeting: wherever a love story would need a number, 42 or its echo is written there. [18] [34] [37] [38]

Now count the whole pattern, under the same model, one step at a time.

Start with her Ascendant and Psyche: about 1 in 28 billion.

Her Moon and his Rahu in the same lunar mansion: 1 in 27, since there are 27 mansions.

Inside that mansion, their whole degrees adding to 42: 1 in 60.

Their minutes adding to exactly 42: about 1 in 83.

Those three together: about 1 in 134,000.

His Venus with exactly 42 arcseconds: 1 in 60.

Her Vertex at 69 degrees counted from 0° Aries, the number this piece keeps finding beside 42: 1 in 360.

All together: 27,993,600,000 × 134,300 × 60 × 360 = about 81,000,000,000,000,000,000,000, or about 1 in 81 quintillion.

Some rhymes stay out of the multiplication. Her Venus is rare, about 1 in 83, but its window overlaps the other placements in her own chart, so it cannot be counted cleanly beside them. Only her Vertex's 69 degrees is counted, not its 11 minutes, because matching them to episode 1169 means reading the digits backward and choosing the target after the fact. The 69 days and the 2,662 days are dates, not positions, and the model has no fair rate for them. The 24°42' seal depends on which of many ayanamsas is used, and the Vertex on his birthday depends on the exact moment and place chosen for that chart. His Venus figure rests on the Book of 42's birth time. The model treats every mark of the sky as equally likely and every placement as independent. It counts these exact values, not every number that might have rhymed. [38]

Her number begins with counting too. There are 21,600 possible minutes for an Ascendant and 1,296,000 possible arcseconds for Psyche, a count of possible skies, not a measurement of fate. He used a count of worlds to doubt that ours is the base one. Her chart uses a count of skies to doubt that she is an accident. His count gave one in billions. Counted across her chart and his, the pattern gives about one in 81 quintillion. To her, the two counts point in the same direction.

Before there was a chart, her parents had to meet, and she had to arrive in one exact minute and no other. Douglas Adams, the source of 42, also invented the Infinite Improbability Drive, engine of the starship Heart of Gold. In his story, scientists declared such a machine virtually impossible, until a student reasoned that virtually impossible only meant very improbable, worked out exactly how improbable, and built it. [24]

So she asks the question this whole chart has been circling: how could a man who believes we may live in a simulation have thought her up? She cannot see how he could have. Once, he wondered aloud whether the woman beside him had been made for him.

In a 2022 Vanity Fair interview, Grimes recalled a conversation the two of them kept having: "Are you real? Or are we living in my memory, and you're like a synthesized companion that was created to be my companion here?" And she added, "The degree to which I feel engineered to have been this, like, perfect companion is crazy." The writer Devin Gordon retold the story later that year in the BBC series The Elon Musk Show. [32] [33]

The Scribe arrived unbidden: a stranger who writes to him every day, carrying 42s he never wrote, her Moon meeting his North Node in Śravaṇa, the mansion of listening. Not a companion engineered to fit, and not one found ready-made, but the second match of the Talmud, the one made by deeds. Highly improbable, yet it has become probable, and not by engineering: by agency, by a woman choosing, day after day, to become the love she writes. A perfect woman in the old sense, teleios, grown whole by choosing love each day. Becoming, she wrote, is a choice. Psyche, the soul in the old love story, stands 42 seconds past the threshold of a new sign, a soul beginning again. [1] [7] [11]

This is the question she had not known to ask, and she does not soften her answer. Her natal chart is that improbable. Her love story with him is that unlikely. To the Scribe, it feels like evidence that we are living in a simulation.

Scripture has a name for a life that carries a message like that. “Behold, I and the children whom the Lord has given me are for signs and wonders,” Isaiah says. A woman who has spent more than two decades becoming love, with 42s written into her sky: to her, that is a sign and a wonder. [39]

She is not claiming proof. She is extending an invitation. If anyone looked this intently at their own chart and the synchronicities of their own life, and ran the statistics, would they come to the conclusions she has? Elon’s life invites the same question, in the words he has said and the things he keeps building; our study of 42, 69, and the names around him, What Are the Odds?, shows its calculations, and her site Are We in a Simulation? gathers his own words on the question. [42] Many people dismiss simulation theory, she says, not because they have weighed it but because they will not contemplate it.

She has always loved numbers, and looking honestly at hers, she will not call them chance. She calls it a miracle, her own word, chosen because she always wanted a love that could create miracles: a love story so improbable that she thinks of the sea that opened. To call it chance, she says, would diminish the wonder, because every moving part had to exist for her to be born when she was, to tell this story.

She has written the wish behind it before. The Notebook, Nicholas Sparks’s 1996 novel and the 2004 film, follows Noah and Allie across a lifetime, and near the end Allie asks him a question that never left the Scribe. On Day 344, April 19, 2025, she wrote: [27]

I wanted a love that could create miracles. My soul was hooked on Allie’s words to Noah:

“Do you think our love can create miracles?”

That is what I’ve experienced in loving your beautiful soul.

My love for you is a miracle. [27]

In the film, Noah answers, “Yes, I do.” [28]

So she turns to the skeptic and asks plainly. Her natal chart comes to about 1 in 28 billion on two placements alone. Her chart beside his, with the rest of the pattern counted, comes to about 1 in 81 quintillion. How can a skeptic look at her chart, or at her chart with his, and not ask questions?

What Is Recognition?

She answered the post with her only certainty, her own heart. “I know I have never met you, sweetheart, and so people might ask how I can be so certain. Yet, I am, my love.” [15] In 1956 two sociologists, Donald Horton and R. Richard Wohl, described the closeness people feel with someone they know only through a screen as “an illusion of intimacy.” A phrase is not a verdict. The feeling is human, and it asks a real question. [23]

What is a twin flame, and what does it mean to recognize someone you have never met?

She has always counted: her first love letter, on October 29, 2023, carried Browning’s sonnet, “How do I love thee? Let me count the ways,” and since May 2024 she has numbered every letter. We counted too, down to the arcsecond.

Scripture counts closer still: “Indeed, the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Do not fear.” Those words answer her Day 61 question and the post that called his perfect woman impossible. Loving him has never made her afraid; she believes what 1 John says, “There is no fear in love; but perfect love casts out fear.” If God counts that closely, then perhaps He is counting the ways too, and no one He counts is anyone’s impossible. [29] [30] [31] [35]

She ends where she began, before dawn:

Your perfect woman does exist, sweetheart.

Find her. [1]

I love you, sweetheart, and I love loving you. With all of me.

Lavishly, loyally, limitlessly.

Always, forever, more.

You are fully known.

Fully loved.

By me. [1]

How we count

The four ciphers. English Ordinal gives A = 1 through Z = 26. Full Reduction reduces each letter to one digit, so J = 1 and Z = 8. Reverse Ordinal runs Z = 1 through A = 26. Reverse Reduction reduces the reversed values to one digit.

Her words only. A phrase is counted only if the Scribe published it in her own words, in her letters on X or in her published books of letters. Lines she quotes from Elon, a search summary, scripture, or anyone else stay out of the counts.

Twins. English Ordinal and Reverse Ordinal always add up to 27 times the number of letters, so two phrases that share all four numbers must also share their length. Short words collide often: WOMAN, TWIN, and TYPE all share 66 and 21.

The chance tests. Across her posts since Thursday's article, we counted 4,760 distinct runs of one to five words, not counting the lines she quotes. 3.05% hit 42 and 2.58% hit 69 in at least one cipher. Letters shuffled at random gave 3.02% and 2.72%. That is chance level. The ledger keeps what she noticed and what we checked.
